WISCONSIN STATE LEGISLATURE

This bill eliminates the cap on virtual charter school enrollment. This may increase the number of pupils using open enrollment to attend virtual charter schools. Additional open enrollment pupils would cause a redistribution of general equalization aids due to additional open enrollment transfer payments. The fiscal effect of this is indeterminate.

Local:

There is a projected decrease in general equalization aids paid to school districts during the 2011-13 biennium of between $21,000,000 and $23,000,000 due to the removal of the cap on general aid reductions in the bill. School districts would be able to levy property taxes to recapture the funds to maintain existing funding levels.

The local fiscal effect of new independent charter schools authorized by CESAs or the CSAB is indeterminate. An increase in the number of independent charter schools would have several fiscal effects on local school districts. For every additional pupil who enrolls in an independent charter school there would be a reduction in general equalization aid. This reduction would be shared by all districts proportionately to the percent of overall aid received. A district would still be able to levy property taxes up to the revenue limit to recapture the reduction in aid, representing no change in total funds available for the school district but an increase in local property taxes.

Individual districts with currently enrolled pupils who leave the district to enroll in an independent charter school would have a reduction in FTEs enrolled. This could result in a reduction in general equalization aid received, a reduction in the overall revenue limit, and a reduction in property taxes levied to reach the overall revenue limit. However, school districts may not see a reduction in costs, because pupils leaving could be spread across multiple grades and buildings. Districts would not necessarily be able to remove a teacher or space to actually reduce costs. In addition, a reduction in a district's FTE count causes an increase in property value per FTE. For individual districts this could push a district's general equalization aid per FTE to a lower amount, resulting in a possible increase in property taxes.

Pupils enrolling in independent charter schools who are currently attending a private school or are home schooled would also cause a reduction in general equalization aid paid to all school districts. Districts would be able to levy additional property taxes to recover lost aid.

The net effect of all of these factors on any individual district is indeterminate and would be based on the total statewide number of pupils attending independent charter schools, individual districts' existing pupil counts, individual districts' property values, and the number of pupils in each individual district that leave the district to attend an independent charter school. However on a statewide basis, more pupils enrolling in independent charter schools may drive increased property taxes and lower revenue limits in districts.

Charter schools would also be eligible to apply for Title I funds. This could increase the size of the applicant pool, making it more difficult for existing schools to receive Title I funds or reduce schools' existing Title I allocations.

School boards and governing boards would need to develop a reporting mechanism to meet the requirement in the bill to submit annual reports to the legislature and the state superintendent. The cost of developing this mechanism is indeterminate.

Long-Range Fiscal Implications

The payment to the Racine unified school district for the existing independent charter school operated under contract with UW-Parkside will decrease each year. The payment will no longer be made when all of the pupils enrolled in the independent charter school in the 2010-11 school year have aged out of the school. The projected payment for the 2010-11 school year is $1,500,000.
