Description
obtaining crime victim mental health treatment records

Assumptions Used in Arriving at Fiscal Estimate

This bill creates a procedure for a criminal case defendant to seek access to the mental health treatment records of a crime victim that are not in the possession of or under the control of a government entity when he or she believes that those records contain information that is crucial to the defendant's defense. First, the court must grant the request, review the records and determine whether the records should be disclosed. If the court determines they should be disclosed, the crime victim may then review those records and consent to disclose the records, appeal the court's decision or decline to disclose the records and be barred from testifying at the trial.

All filings and records pertinent to this process and the mental health treatment records of the victim are to be sealed by the court. Additionally, all decisions of the court during this process may be appealed at any time by the state or the crime victim as a matter of right. This bill also adds enumerated rights to the basic bill of rights for victims describing the right of a victim to privacy in his or her mental health treatment records, in accordance with the new procedure that the bill creates.

District Attorneys indicated this legislation could significantly increase the number of prosecutor and victim witness coordinator hours needed to prosecute these cases due to additional hearings, increased victim outreach and appeals.

Long-Range Fiscal Implications

The long-range fiscal implications of this legislation on district attorneys offices are indeterminate.
