Fiscal Estimate Narratives

Description race-based higher education programs and requirements

Assumptions Used in Arriving at Fiscal Estimate

In general, the bill would modify certain race-based programs or requirements in higher education so they apply to disadvantaged students rather than minority students.

Minority and disadvantaged student programs:

Current law requires the UW System to fund programs for enrolled minority and disadvantaged students and programs to recruit minority and disadvantaged students. The UW System must also adopt a recruitment and retention plan for minority and disadvantaged students. Finally, the UW System must establish a grant program for enrolled minority and disadvantaged graduate students.

The bill would modify these provisions to delete reference to the minority status of students so they apply only to disadvantaged students. The bill also specifies that, in determining whether a student is disadvantaged, the student's race, ethnicity, national origin, gender, sexual orientation, or religion may not be considered, either directly or indirectly. This prohibition would apply to the UW System for all purposes for which it determines whether a student is disadvantaged.

The fiscal impact of this modification on UW System is unknown, but is expected to be minimal.

Lawton grants:

Current law requires the UW System to establish a grant program for enrolled minority undergraduates. The grants are known as Lawton grants. A "minority undergraduate" is defined as an undergraduate student who is a Black American; an American Indian; a Hispanic; or Hmong. The bill would change the Lawton grant program so that grants are awarded to disadvantaged undergraduate students rather than minority undergraduate students.

The fiscal impact of this modification on UW System is unknown, but is expected to be minimal.
