Plain language analysis

Chapter DWD 310 establishes fees for training services and materials related to the GATB that the Department furnishes to governmental and nonprofit organizations. The GATB was a series of tests developed by the U.S. Department of Labor for measuring basic skills, including math, reading, and manual dexterity, that was used primarily for applicants for apprenticeships and skilled industrial or manufacturing positions. However, use of the GATB was discontinued more than 20 years ago and the Department does not provide GATB-related training services and materials. This rule repeals ch. DWD 310 because the chapter is obsolete.

Summary of, and comparison with, existing or proposed federal regulations

No federal statute or existing or proposed federal regulation refers to the GATB.

Comparison with rules in adjacent states

Illinois, Michigan, and Minnesota statutes and administrative rules do not refer to the GATB. Likewise, Iowa statutes do not refer to the GATB. An Iowa administrative rule refers to the GATB, but for a purpose not related to this rule, which is to identify the GATB as an example of one of the types of evaluations required under a Temporary Assistance for Needy Families program that assists program participants in becoming self-sufficient through work-ready activities. See 441 IAC 93.5 (3) b. (1).
