Statutes interpreted

Section 138.14, Stats.

Statutory authority and explanation of statutory authority

The statutory authorities for the rule are the following:

Section 138.14(8)(b), Stats., which states that “[t]he division may promulgate such rules as it considers necessary for the administration of this section, including rules establishing database transaction fees under sub. (14)(h) and other fees considered reasonable and necessary by the division,” and

Section 138.14(14)(h), Stats., which states that “[t]he division shall, by order or rule, specify a database transaction fee of no more than $1 that the database provider shall charge to licensees to cover the costs of developing and implementing the database, and accessing the database to verify that a customer does not have any payday loans with the licensee or others that in combination with a new transaction will create a violation of this section.”

Related statutes or rules

Section 138.09, Stats.

Plain language analysis

As a result of the passage of 2011 Wisconsin Act 32, changes to the existing payday lending rule are necessary to address conflicts that may exist between the current law and the existing rule. For example, the existing rule references to the repayment plan identify the statutory citation as 138.14(11g), whereas the statute now requires the repayment plan under 138.14(11g)(a), not 138.14(11g). Also, the existing rule excludes, in certain cases, transactions of 6 months or more from the definition of a payday loan, whereas the definition of "payday loan" now only includes transactions with terms of 90 days or less.

A further objective is to provide clarity and direction for lenders making payday loans, as well as create clear guidance for the Department of Financial Institutions ("DFI"), which is charged with enforcing s. 138.14, Stats.

Summary of and comparison with existing or proposed federal regulations

DFI is aware that the Consumer Financial Protection Bureau intends to focus some of its resources on payday lending, but is unaware of any currently proposed regulation or rule.

Comparison with rules in adjacent states

An internet-based search of payday lending regulations for the states of Illinois, Iowa, Michigan and Minnesota found the following:

All four states now regulate payday lending.

Illinois has an extensive number of payday lending rules including rules covering topics such as: loan terms, a certified database method of verification and gross monthly income verification.

Iowa has no applicable rules at this time.

Michigan has a limited number of payday lending rules. An internet search of rules for Michigan finds their rules focus on definitions in regards to a database.

Minnesota has a limited number of rules regarding licensed regulated lenders, which may include payday lenders. This state's rules cover licensing an office; loan limitations as regards multiple offices; licensee responsibility as regards the acts of assignees; management, control and transfer of accounts; and time and date computations.

Summary of factual data and analytical methodologies

In developing these rules, the department reviewed payday lending laws in states across the country. The department is engaged in outreach with payday lenders and consumer organizations to gather input. Because the department regulates licensed financial services for the state, the division could rely on extensive staff expertise and experience in drafting regulations for these entities.

Analysis and supporting documents used to determine effect on small business

The division anticipates that any economic impact of implementing the rule would be minimal. The rule provides clarity to the payday lending industry with clear definitions and requirements which now must be made as the result of 2011 Wisconsin Act 32. Overall, the requirements of this rule are straight-forward for ease in compliance.

Effect on small business and final regulatory flexibility analysis

The proposed rule may require payday lenders to make minor changes to websites and/or forms. The agency's experience in making similar changes to DFI's website or forms indicates that the cost of making such changes is minimal.
